

---

Acknowledgements

We are grateful to both the Society for the Study of Childhood (SSCIP) and the European Association of Archaeologists (EAA) whose respective conferences in 2015 and 2016 provided both the trigger and the foundation for this collection of papers.

We are extremely grateful to those individuals who generously gave of their time to conduct the peer review process of the papers included within the volume. We would also like to thank the contributors to the volume who shared our belief that it is possible to find evidence of interactions between different age groups across the life course.

Hugo Pérez Trejo of the National School of Anthropology and History (ENAH) in Mexico City very kindly helped us to identify and source the image used on the front cover. He was the person who first brought the image to our attention and sparked the idea for further investigating inter-generational interactions in the past. Thanks are also due respectively to the Bodleian Library, Oxford, for permitting us to use the image in the front cover, and to the Historic Environment Scotland (HES), Edinburgh, for the use of the image that introduced the EAA session Giving New Meaning to Cultural Heritage: The Old and Young in Past Societies.

Finally, we are very appreciative to the Editorial Board and the publication staff of the Museum of Archaeology, University of Stavanger – AmS-Skrifter series for producing the volume.